Located just outside Helper, Utah, this 748-plus-acre ranch combines history, recreation, and wildlife habitat in Carbon County's mountain country. Known as the Ghost Town Getaway Ranch, the land holds portions of the historic Latuda and Rains mining towns, and relics of Utah's coal-country heritage remain across the property. It has been used for recreation for more than three decades: hiking, hunting, camping, rock climbing, and exploring. The current owners have expanded the road and trail system, including over 4 miles of UTV trails leading to secluded, private parts of the ranch well screened from the main road. Elk and mule deer use the property as winter range, with black bear, mountain lion, and upland birds also in the area. The centerpiece is a large log-style lodge built for group use, with a great room, wrap-around porch, sauna, and separate guest entrance, which makes it a strong fit for family gatherings, retreats, or potential short-term rental use.
